For the CHRONICLE THE KISS.

> BY MAY HAMILTON. Of all joys that have birth On our fun-loving earth, The dearest, sweetest and best-Sweeter, better than the rest-Of all pleasures is this. The meeting of souls in a kiss; And life has been wasted Unless one has tasted, From the gold cup of bliss The nectar of love in a kiss.

Ah! what is this thing Of which poets all sing? Owen Meredith names it. His poetry claims it. "Happy hush of heart to heart, Love delaying long to part." 'Tis a tremble, a thrill, a quiver; Two souls to each deliver Repturous expectation, Glorious realization. Ecstatic, infinite bitss

Love's rapture in a kiss! A lover stands in wait. His longing soul to sate. In luscious nectur stps From languishing red lips. He sees the sparkling drops, And yet a while he stops; The kiss should be discover. The joy would soon be over: So he clasps her trembling waist-He would not be in baste About so sweet a thing-

The sweetest love can bring.

And thus he holds her so, And begs each moment not to go; Her form he softly presses, And plays with her long tresses; Then slowly be approaches, Where liberty encroaches, To the lips of his fair Lady-love, and when there, No longer he desists From a loving, passionate kiss

"Tis the sweet language of love, Echoed in heaven above, A relic of Eden's pleasure, Which lovers will treasure Ye gods! know ye greater bliss Than a tender, rapturous kiss? Ah, cursed be him who insists There's any harm in a kiss.
